The Yarmouth detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was experiencing persistent problems with temperature and humidity control in many areas of their facility. They were also experiencing problems with odour containment in the small laboratory area of the building. The problems stemmed from poor control of outside air supply and improperly sized humidification equipment. In addition the control systems were not adequate to satisfy control demands for a number of small but diversified occupancies.

F. C. O'Neill, Scriven and Associates Ltd. were commissioned as prime consultant to determine cost effective solutions to the problems and to provide the required design to implement them.
